NAMES TO LOOK FOR...

FRANK CAPRIO

You know him as: General Treasurer since January of 2007

While a senior at Harvard, Caprio became a Delegate from Congressional Dist. 2 at the age of 21. At 24, he served two terms as State Representative -commuting from law school in Boston to the State House daily. Caprio served in the State Senate from '94 until '07 when he became General Treasurer.

Another day at the office: "I had busy days then," Caprio said, laughing about his days as both student and legislator. "I look at it as an extension of my education being involved in public service, no two days are alike and you learn the most from the people you interact with."

A team player: "Whatever I do I'd want to be able to lead a team of dedicated professionals like I have here in the Treasury. I have learned that the key to success is to have good people around you," the Treasurer said.

Just the beginning: "Let's roll up our sleeves and do the work necessary to protect the state assets," Caprio said, noting his prescient move of $1 billion in state investments in sub prime mortgages, investments that would be near impossible to sell now. Caprio has also made a priority of creating a competitive tax structure that attracts business to Litty Rhody.

What's next: "At this point I'm keeping my options open," he said, explaining that he'll make a decision to move on or stay put within the next five years, but either way, his fundraising cache will be ready. "It's not that I'm just thinking about the future but I'm preparing for it," he said.
